IQS CEO featured in ASQ Quality Progress Article Discussing the Future of Quality

Michael Rapaport, President and CEO, featured in Quality 3.0 article published in February 2010 issue of Quality Progress

March 3, 2010, Cleveland, OH - IQS, Inc., is featured in the February 2010 issue of Quality Progress Magazine article “Quality 3.0: Is the Next Stage of Evolution at Hand?”. The article is based on an interview by author Kreg Kukor, president and CEO of V Web Partners and features forward-looking commentary on the future of quality management from IQS CEO Michael Rapaport and ProQC’s Vice President, Michael Hetzel. Mr. Rapaport, along with Mr. Hetzel, discussed their industry experience from a multi-industry and global perspective and share predictions as to the future of quality management, supply chain strategy, and risk mitigation.

“IQS has a long history of providing enterprise quality solutions to its customers around the world. The knowledge and insight shared in this article stems from being in the trenches, helping solve an organizations most critical quality issues”, said Michael Rapaport, CEO of IQS. As a quality management software company, we see the significant benefits that an integrated quality solution can bring to the company’s bottom line.”

Some of the key discussion points from this article include:

- Companies are now realizing that they cannot simply discard product that has defects or does not work properly. They must find ways to deal with these issues.
- Quality management processes need to be incorporated in the fundamental process of an organization and its supply partners to be successful across the product lifecycle.
- Quality innovators will be the market winners in the future.
